Subject: 8 Pin Panel, WS210 Laptop Connection Trouble Shooting

The most common method for connecting a laptop to an 8 PIN panel for programming is by using the 9 to 25 F cord installed in the panel, along with a download cable plugged into the serial port on the laptop pc.

Most laptops do not have serial ports any more, however. In each case you will need a USB to serial port adapter (we sell by Edwards). This device typically has a short cable with a USB connector on one end that plugs into your pc's USB port, and a 9 pin connector on the other end that plugs into the 9 pin cable. Be sure to buy one of the adapters that we make with prolific's operating system (Windows XP, Vista, etc.), they are not all the same. Refer to the adapter's installation instructions.

If using a USB to serial adapter, the com port number is different than the one used by the USB device. In the example below it's called a Prolific USB-to-Serial Comm Port, and is using COM4. If the com port number is greater than COM4, you will be required to change it to an unused number between 1 and 4. To do this, refer to the Device Manager section, double click on the USB COM port, click on Port Settings > Advanced, then change the COM port number. (Please see Windows Help & Support for more details on how to change the COM port number. Windows Vista is similar)
