I've always had a thing for photo booths. I treasure the classic black & white photo strips I've saved of Steve & me during our dating years. So it's no surprise that I'm loving all the fun photo booth props that are popping up all over pinterest. We had a lot of fun with our campy Christmas card last year so I wanted to put together another one that brought smiles. Steve wasn't so sure of my idea, but Jule was totally up for it and the girls won. :-)

Here are the props I doodled for our little holiday project... If you can see your family or friends having fun with these festive photo props, we made them available for you to print at home HERE. We recommend using a 67 pound cardstock. It's thick enough to be sturdy but not so thick it jams your printer. However I did have to reinforce the reindeer antlers so they would stand up straight. Cut out around the images & hot glue thin dowels to them. I purchased 5 long thin dowels & cut them by scoring them with a scissors & then breaking them. For the shorter sticks you could also use wood kabob skewers or cheap chopsticks. We just moved some furniture and used wrapping paper as a backdrop. I have this inexpensive light kit for shooting my wholesale line of paper goods that we used with a slr camera but a simple flash camera would work just fine too. We got loads of great shots, but I'm only sharing a few since I just printed the cards today and I don't want to wreck the surprise... (my Christmas cards usually get delivered on the 24th :-)) I plan on bringing these to our family Christmas and hope to get some silly shots of our crew. We hope you have fun with these too! Here is our finished product! (added at a later date) I cropped our favorite pictures and created a 17" long photo strip in photoshop and had 11x17 color copies made and cut them up in strips. I folded the strip in half and put them in colorful #10 envelopes for our 2012 Christmas card. Like to get a little crafty every now & then? Just add it to a shape, and use 2-4 (I most often use 3) layers of card stock. White Dry Erase Paddles from the Dollar Tree are GREAT for photo booth props! Just add vinyl! I use contact paper from the dollar tree to "lamine" props that are used outside or may receive a lot of wear and tear. I use a lot of the thick craft "popsicle sticks" for handles, but the wooden skewers and wooden spoons you can buy in packs at the Dollar tree also work as handles! I think photo booths work best when you have a variety of mediums. Stop by the Dollar tree for feather boas and mardi gras beads, and sometimes they have themed hats and large glasses. Five Below often has awesome holiday themed props - their selection of Christmas hats and headbands was fantastic for a photo booth - just add some custom signs and a few paper mustaches and glasses on sticks! For Backgrounds, try plastic table cloths, or look at Photo Booth Backgrounds on Amazon. If a file is just a jpg meant for printing, upload it to Design Space and erase the white background (There's a step by step here) and then you can use Print Then Cut to have Cricut cut them for you! These are dry erase paddles from the Dollar Tree. You can find them in the section beside the classroom decorations. They are great for photo booths! Every November panic starts to set in as I search for that Christmas-card-perfect outfit for each member of my family. Then I have to find the perfect place to take our pictures. And then, room on the calendar to take said pictures. I love it, and it totally stresses me out too.This year, thanks to a challenge from OshKosh B'Gosh, I think we are going to do things a bit different. As part of the B'Gosh Believes program, I was first asked to find the perfect Christmas card outfit and then asked to create a DIY photobooth. I admit, at first I was at a loss. But that's the fun of a challenge.After wrapping my head around the idea of making a photobooth, I came up with an idea that turned out so great that there is a 95% chance friends and family will be seeing this idea on a Christmas card this year. (Spoiler alert friends and family!)Oh and unlike some complicated Pinterest ideas, this photobooth is so easy you can literally put it together in minutes. Seriously.MaterialsFoam Insulation PanelDry Wall Saw or similarFabricStraight pinsTripodSeveral months ago when designing my daughter's Strawberry Shortcake Party, I discovered foam insulation panels. They are lightweight, cheap and make the perfect backdrop for parties — and photobooths. You can pick one up at Home Depot for $14.25. Since purchasing mine last March, this is its third incarnation — best $14.25 ever.Don't be afraid of the saw. The foam panel is 8 feet x 4 feet, unfortunately, most fabrics are not that wide. So I cut my foam board down to 3 1/2 feet wide. (Note, a saw cuts right through the foam, and I did this very sloppily. You can't tell.) Easy, I promise.After you cut your board down to fit your fabric width (assuming you need to based on the fabric you buy), cover the shinny side of the board with fabric. Use the straight pins to secure the fabric to the board — place them into the panel at an angle so they aren't sticking out the other side. (Note, I still have a white table cloth taped to my board from its last used because I am lazy, but you don't need it.)The light is best outside, so I propped ours up on the garage door. Using a tripod and self timer, I took these pictures.Cute, right?!?!Unfortunately, dad was out of town for the fun, so we will have to recreate the cuteness all over again. Oh well.Yes, those are matching outfits from the OshKosh B'Gosh Holiday line. The girls are also wearing ruby-red sparkly shoes from Oshkosh — so cute.While my inspiration was Christmas, you could duplicate this for any party or holiday.After you make your fabulous photobooth you are gonna need some cute props, right?Good news, I have free printable templates for you!Download templates for Santa (hat and beard), Rudolf and Chalkboard Bubble photo props here. Once you download the templates, print them out, trace them onto a thick paper, cut them out and attach them to a bamboo stick. (Tip — attach the pointed end to the prop so that you hold the flat end.)For the Chalkboard Bubble, you need chalkboard laminate. It is self adhesive, so adhere the chalkboard laminate to a piece of cardboard, then cut out your shape.
