Member Ok, pulled the electronics from the amplifier, visual inspection did not show bad welds under 10x mag so safe enough that it is not the problem. There are 2 rated 2200uf 35V plugs, each one checked while on the circuit, unclean and unloaded with a DVOM, Meter at 200K Ohm and the first controlled hood, performs up to 200K and stops and stops, checked according to one and goes to 10.5K and stops, instantly download after the counter removal and reapply. There is also a colored cream almost like a hard plastic substance that is connecting the 2 caps to the .thicker base at the cap that reads 10.5K and you lower towards the point where you encounter the other. I'm guessing that where it is leaked and it's bad? Show mercy on my apparent lack of knowledge, I lost the first 20 years of my life and my memory "which included most of my intention of electronics" due to a head injury closed by a motorbike wreck and I'm Starting with electronics as rehabilitation / hobby then brings with me because it will improve better. Is there a LoneSome 8 leg IC there inside? A 4558 or 4560 or TL072 or something like that? It would be my first hypothesis. I am a total beginner on the guitars, but I have a collection powder of the ancient e-guitar (a gift of my childhood - well, when I was about 12) and I was thinking of using it. Thanks Á, Diyaudio Member Á, sign up Date: Aug 2001 Location: Sweden (Mora) being a total beginner, the bass could be easier I imagine. Less strings, and only play in a rope at a time (especially) I'm not saying that it's easy to become a good bass player, it requires a good feeling for rhythm and times. Practice with a metronome to reach it. Á, Diyaudio Member Á, sign up: January 2005 Location: Lisboa Thank you. I like listening to Jazz, Electropop / Pop (new order, Boys Box for pets, prefabricated sprouts), some electronic (kraftwerk) etc. I'm not in rock music, but I think some music / styles that I like are suitable for the bass, no? It's just a vague to increase my self-esteem and feel good about myself, but managing to be able to do something good. Á, diyaudio member á, sign up Date: Aug 2001 Location: Sweden (Mora) Well, let me say that there is a place for the Bass guitar in most types of music Á ¢ Diyaudio Editor Á, Á, sign up for the date: Dec 2001 Location: San Francisco, United States of America & San José, Costa Rica I don't know much, but I heard that to play badly it is difficult not so difficult. Otherwise: Quote: Requires a good feeling for rhythm and time. If you find out that you have this, you will be loved by other members of the Usually it takes a little work, my suggestion is to find someone to give you lessons, which does not just keep you from wasting time, but gives you a structure so you are forced to practice every week in anticipation of the lesson. Good luck!

is deleted but will be Brucing online Amp 2021 á diyaudio Member Á Subscribe Date: Jul 2004 Location: Austin, TX Hi Simpleton ... IM Playin Bass Bout 3 years ... I've never tried electric guitar, and I can't tell you Which is easier ... but I think if you want to be an average bass player, it is perhaps easier to play bass than an electric guitar with a hard and high-speed solo on it... but!!! If you want to play Bassist as a real bass player, better feel a bass player playing by some real bass player (like Billy Sheehan, Stuart Hamm, or Jaco ...) Then find out soon the things that are impossible to believe! (and impossible to play!!!) ... and I think it is so harder than any solo on the guitar ... because the spaces between the keys are much more than an electric guitar and you have to stretch your fingers more and they should be too hard Unfortunately most bass player are on average ... I called them Bassist, because when you watch their playin, they don't just play some riffs or melodies very easy, I think you can play all in Bout 1 year! !. But just take a look at one of the bass SOLOS on Billy Sheehan's website .. (www.billysheehan.com) ... is my favorite Billy Sheehan S Solo: /Bi...20only%202.mp3 do you have to hit everything his fingers? Don't discourage the boy! of all get a teacher. Not someone who identifies himself as a guitarist or some other tool-IST, but someone who is a bassist before and above all and is willing to work with a beginner. Second, get a decent bass. There are many good budget tools out there like the SX / Essex lines and have set up correctly for intonation and action. Thirdly, practice, practice, practice fourth, not listening to players like Vic Wooten and thinks "I will never play". Do it because it's funny. It is easy to play simple lines for root notes for a lot of things, about the same that for a lot of 3 chord guitar lines. But good stuff is hard and very different than that. To know if the bass is for you, I think it should be the instrument you listen first, along with the drums. He also listens to something like "Monkey Time" from Victor Wooten Live in America. If you can listen to him repeatedly and be amazed by thisThey are playing, then the bass is probably the tool for you. "...ja can not contain any furrow, if you have no pocket" Á, member of diyaudio á, á, join join September 2003 Location: Upstate NY or instrument will bring you about the same effort to make some noise that sounds like music. To get the good in both usually requires lessons, although software and online lessons are a help. I chose the bass initially because I have very big fingers and can not fret many chords without interfering with an adjacent string. Not to mention, I like the feeling of a low funky line. Funny, now that I'm beating my bass for a few years I can almost play G*%ar riffs - chords are still a problem. I remember seeing Leslie West when I was a child. To put it kindly, he's a great man. He recorded his fingers of the fretting hands in smaller tips, so that the guitar can be played with the fat fingers if you are quite dedicated. Although Jaco fans and other virtuous players can argue, bass guitar usually has a support role. This doesn't mean you should never take one, but the time and feeling for the rythm is the key to a good bass playing for most bands. Since the tool is a support, you will enjoy more with it if you find people to support - get into a band or find friends with which to jam. Playing G*%ar alone is more fun, bass soloist tends to pull towards riffing when you probably should work on timing. It's my two cents. diyAudio Join Date: January 2005 Location: Lisboa Miller's time is - what do you say? - Sweet! I can't wait to hear it on my car with the submarine working. I really like the low tone and the knight knight. Thank you all!
