Podcasts seem to make a comeback as an information in the age of the Internet the main source of funding. It's a great way to listen to experts talk about the topics you're interested in, and it's relatively easy to find great podcasts. Also, you can find a lot of entertainment podcast in which relate stories, tell jokes, and there are even podcasts documentaries that deep dive into specific topics. You can literally find a podcast on any topic you can think of. If you are a fan of podcasts and are in the market for a new podcast app, here is the best podcast app for Android. Most of the apps on this list are podcast app that allow you to download or stream your favorite podcasts. We thought that we were at least include an app that helps you make them yourself. Anchor is a podcast platform that offers unlimited hosting. The app allows you to record audio, publishing it in various places like iTunes and Google Podcast and import audio from other devices to upload. It's a clean premise with a business model that wants you to have been successful so that both you and the more they can make money. The app and hosting are free, though, and this is not an advertisement or anything, so test yourself if you want to create your own podcast. Price: Free / up to $ 1.99Castbox is one of the few free apps podcast. It boasts a collection of over one million podcasts, emptied from places like iTunes and others. The app also includes support for 70 languages, learning the language podcasts, Chromecast support, support Echo Amazon and more. It also includes the synchronization of cloud for the multiple support of the device. The free version comes with everything and has no ads. The in-app purchases are basically optional. DoggCatcher is one of the oldest podcast app. However, the app receives frequent updates. Currently it has support for things such as Android Wear, Android Auto, and the Chromecast. In addition, it boasts a massive library of podcasts, support for playlists, playback at variable speed, themes and various functions of automation and customization. The app also has the design of the material. You have to pay $ 2.99 in advance. However, there are no advertising and no additional purchase in-app. Google is making the selection of podcasts what they did to their selection messaging. There are currently three different platforms for podcasts by Google. The first is Google Podcast. It's an app rather podcast standard with the speed playback controls and the ability to skip the silent segments, Google Play Music is the music streaming Google's current service and also has the support of the podcast. Finally, many people charge daily or weekly shows, podcasts and YouTube-like material. The Google podcasts is the easiest option and it's free, so it's what I recommend before. He had a rough start, but it works much better now. Price: FREE / $ 0.99 per month / $ 9.99 for the annual The casts have been one of the easiest recommendations on any list of Android apps that we have here authority. It's still an exceptional player podcast, but it's not easy recommendation it was. The app has an excellent user interface, good functions of detectability, some user features of power and even some personalization features such as themes. This has been a premium app in its day. However, it went the subscription route a little 'back, so it's hard to recommend to your average podcast listener since © podcasts are generally free to listen and this developer is charged monthly. It's a great deal if you live and breathe the podcasts, but those who hear only the occasional podcast would be better served with something that does not cost money every month. Podbean is an app instead of podcast and works quite well. It boasts a metric ton of podcasts organized in various categories. You can sign up, stream, download and listen to how you choose. It is also equipped with locking screen controls, various audio effects, Chromecast support, automatic Android support and integration with Amazon Alexa. This means that you can use it virtually virtually Some Google Play auditors have had some bones to choose from, but we have not noticed anything terrible during our tests. Joe Hindy / Android AuthorityPodcast Addict is one of the most popular podcasts apps. Contains a massive podcast library, audiobooks, live streaming radio and more. It also has support for YouTube and Twitch channels. The app also presents the variable reproduction speed, skip the silence options, Chromecast support and Sonos support. The UI looks just a bit old, but it works really well with tons of options for playlists, reproduction and organization. The app is free but also has advertising. There is a version of optional $ 2.99 Pro in the Google Play Store if you want to remove ads. Podcast Go is one of the podcast up and incoming apps. It is equipped with basic things like the download of podcast episodes, variable reproduction, suspension timer and more. It also has a delightful design with material design. The app boasts over 300,000 podcasts available. You can search or browse your free time and enroll. Otherwise, it's a fairly simple experience. The app is free with advertising. You can pay $ 2.99 to remove ads. You can use this free as part of a Google Play Pass subscription if you use it. Price: free / $ 9.99 per monthspotify is one of the best and most popular musical streaming services in the world. He also started to make podcasts at the beginning of 2016. There are many podcasts available compared to something like iTunes (which most other apps for podcasts use for their libraries) but do not doubt that the number of podcasts available we are going to Stars over time. You can download and use the service for free until you care about some audio advertisements or you can peep $ 9.99 / month for the full and ad announce experience. If you use it already spotify, you will probably arrive a point where a second podcast app will be redundant. Price: free / $ 9.99 to the monthtunein radio is among the best radio applications outside. Your attention is mostly levels in live radio. However, the app also includes podcasts, audio books, radio stations (both AM and FM), and even live sports events. Podcast owners must make their podcasts available for this. It doesn't do things like iTunes scrubs for the podcast content. Otherwise, it's a very served podcast app. The Premium subscription gives you access to Live NFL, MLB and other sports games along with other features. We may not recommend this as a standalone podcast app. However, those who also love to listen to radio shows from other platforms can find this to be better than a normal podcast app. Appsbest apps, Google Play Store, Podcasts Source: Marco Miranda Our phones are supercomputer pocket with cameras and professional batteries for days, but what would be the point without the best Android apps to take advantage of it?
