Smartphone Applications are one of those things that are easy to getzel because they are cheap, they don't take up much space, and it's easy to forget that they exist. So, do we want to know, how many have you installed on your smartphone right now? In a recent article in the New York Times, Writer Jenna Wortham reveals that you have an absurd amount of app installed ... 259 to be exact. We talked about breaking your app addiction in the past, but the apps are added so quickly is difficult to keep up. I hear: how many apps are you installed on your smartphone right now? Dear Lifehacker, I have too many apps on my smartphone and I can never find what I'm looking for. I read the Moredigital diary: are we suffering from Burnout of the mobile app? | The New York Times in the spring of my youth, I enjoyed configuring a fresh computer, installing programs in the naked operating system as I was spreading the beautiful city of Brasilia. Now I'm deep in my years, your back hurts to sit and create a new computer is a slog. I can do without some apps for weeks or months, but I rely on a significant number just to work normally. Or to put it more optimistically, these apps make me much more productive. Maybe they will help you too. I received a new Mac at work last week. Here is everything I installed immediately.chrome: I only use safari to test things. Firefox seems more attractive, but I rely on many chrome extensions, in particular Workona. Fortunately, Chrome automatically synchronizes all my extensions, so it's something that you don't have to do. .Dropbox: I can't imagine trusting a computer to hold the only copy of my files. I use selective synchronization to grab my LifeHacker folder and a couple of other useful folders, like that with my reaction gifs. (Giphy is Normie Trash.) Plus I can work from home or even check a file from my phone if I have to have A.1password: I hate login throughout a new computer, especially with two factors. 1Password makes it tolerable. SELECTION: This is what uses LifeHacker instead of the e-mail. There are negative aspects of a perpetual work chatroom, but it is still much better than long e-mail thread. And since almost all my e-mails are external communications, I don't have to mentally move back and forth as often among readers and sources, and talking to my colleagues. But he has his uses. Spotify is social, but Apple Music integrates better with the music I really own. SEMPIFY: says Last.fm which music I am listening about Spotify and iTunes. I have a unhealthy interest to meticulously track down my listening habits, so I hate let a listening is not anchored. I promised twice I promised that eliminates my Last.fm account and released. I failed twice. Condirizzo with Internet access VPN, Malwarebytes Anti-Malware and Sophos Home Anti-Virus: honestly I could jump, but in the end I regret it. I learned to use the dental floss and learned to immediately install my security apps. Photooshop: To add a column logo to a postage, or A € à,~ à "enlargeA € à,~ an image by filling out the sides with the content -Avare filling, or to cover my calendar with the cerebral in Meme expansion. Fantastic: Excellent for enrolling many calendars. Fantastic does not have your own synchronization feature, so I have to enroll it to my Google / Facebook / etc calendars whenever I install it on a new device. It is worth it for the flexible display equipped with the notifications, and higher normal event in adding.vlc language: QuickTime sucks. VLC manages more file formats and playlist.yoink options: it allows me to drag and release files to a point of Temporary, instead of moving them to the desktop and backwards. The seeker should come with this function.Bartender: Mac OS allows me to hide the elements of the menu bar, but it is a pain to bring them back. Bartender hides them just behind a click. This where Stick Airplay, Adobe Creative Cloud, Dropbox and other objects that only occasionally needs to see. Freedom: To block Twitter, Facebook, etc. etc. I need to work. WinDerList: I have a stupid habit of using several apps to do simultaneously. But this is not that habit. WonderList is where I put random thoughts and ideas and quotes, because it is cheaper than keeping the text files .Todoist: That's where I put in the actual DOS, but in the end it abandons and uses the app for the reminder instead . But occasionally, I have a project that actually requires multilevel lists and team sharing, and I manage it on todoist.it to download more favorites: The Souolver Calculator, Piezo for the recording of audio snippet from other apps, Highland 2 for writing , SmallPDF for fiddly pdf activity, disk map to view my hard drive space. And in the end I have to take in the office and Skype, even if I wouldn't call them any favorites. But I need apps above immediately, or my computer still seems that someone else is at home. And as they are old and easily confused, I'm trying to avoid that feeling.
