Light headed and woozy

A Seabrooker was recently complained that he had started feeling won from time to time. This is a common problem among older people. In fact, the incidence in medical literature varies from about 10 to 40 percent of people over 65. The definition of chronic vertigo is repeated (over at least 1 month) episodes of sensation of dizziness, light heads, weak, rotating or instability. When you describe the dizziness a number of sensations are shown by sun or in combination - see table 1. Among those who have chronic dizziness, most commonly lasts less than a minute (33% of people) or less than 2 hours (40 percent) Or less than 2 hours (40 percent) or about a third of people with chronic vertigo have daily periods and the rest has only occasional episodes during a month. A team of geriatric doctors at the university of Yale has activated vertigo and even proposed that it is the "geriatric syndrome" à €
