Here is a look to start with a personal site along with some topic ideas. The terms "blog", "personal site," and also "online diary" are sometimes used interchangeably. How to refer to the platform is largely on the subject matter, if you want an audience, and how it is hosted. Your personal website can be everything you want, including hobbies, pets, or other interests. It can be a family site that shares your adventures with your loved ones along with an area for comments and discussions. If you are an author, your personal site can be a platform to get feedback about the ideas of history or drafts of the rough book. Dedicate a personal website for sharing as you are getting through a difficult experience in life, or add an e-commerce element to show handmade jewelry or other creative adventures. There is no wrong idea topic for your personal site. Once you decide what you want to dedicate your site to find an appropriate host. For example, a blogging platform would be perfect for a simple online-style magazine website, while connecting e-commerce functionality would require a richest feature-rich web host. There are many excellent free website platforms with different features. Here are some favorites. Many Americans admit that they get their news online these days, rather than base on old forms of media, such as TV and printing. The problem is that there are so many Published online, it's difficult to know what is reliable and what is not. This is particularly true in such a divided political climate. Some of the following sources have editorials that overlook right or left, but their relationship is as centered. And many of them started as print news sources. In both cases, these are the places that provide news can be trusted to be true most of the time: it has been around 1889, and its paper edition is the IL Newspaper widely circulated in the nation. Today, the website is a popular source for commercial news and general news. The editorial pages tend to thin a bit on the right, but the reporting of the news of the Wall Street Journal is journalism awarded in its most reliable. CC0 / WSJ 125 Anniversary / Wikimedia Commons Many Americans choose to get their news from a non-American source of news: the BBC. Short to the British transmission channel, the BBC is highly reliable for global news, especially in emergency situations. Founded in 1922, it is the most ancient news organization of the world, and today, its reputation extends to its informational website. If you've ever seen C-Span on television, you probably realized that it shows you exactly what's going on to Washington, D.C. At any time with very little comment. This is what makes it so reliable. Not only you can watch it on TV, but you can go online and see the videos directed by the White House, Congress, Federal Courts and beyond. There is a comment if you choose to view it. CC of 2.0 / Phil Roeder / Flickr first published in 1843, the economist is another source of British news that Americans find reliable. It started as a print magazine, but today you can go online and read articles or a digital version of the magazine that goes out of subscribers every week. Opinions are reduced to a minimum and writers have not even given a byline. CC0 / Canon EOS 60D / Maxpixel Reuters is a popular newswire service that you probably listen to other news quoting most of the time. But did you know that you can go directly to the site to see the news for you? Founded in 1851, the organization is based in London, and has become an authority on global news. CC BY-SA 2.0 / Ghostinthemachine / Wikimedia Commons Similar to Reuters, the associated press is another cable service that news agencies often cite, but you can go directly to your site to see the news for you in one of the most ways Simple possible. The non-profit was around since 1846, and while he has the occasional accusation of injury, you will only receive the facts when checking it. DC of 2.0 / Rochelle Hartman / Flickr USA Today has not reached 1982, making it much younger than many other newspapers, but today is the source of news of the country's most circulating news. Its website is practically the digital version of the newspaper with its colored layout and for the simplest report. CC BY-SA 2.0 / Tony Webster / Flickr The editorial page at Washington Post tends to move to the left, but if you can overcome this, you can count on this multimedia source of Jeff Bezos. For decades, it was one of the best newspapers of the nation. Today it has a great online follow-up that is growing rapidly, thanks to efforts to bring the post to the 21st century. CC BY-SA 2.0 / Elvert Barnes / Flickr The first issue of the magazine News Christian Science Monitor was published in 1908, at a time when the news was considered too sensational. Today, both in print and digital, the non-profit news organization maintains its standards. Keep in mind that the pieces here tend to be longer and more in-depth, and you will not find as many as you could on the other sites. CC BY-SA 2.0 / Sarah & Boston / Political Flickr, which dates back to 2006 is the brand new baby in the block when it comes to reliable sources of news. It was called somehow lean supported by the competition of him, but most of the relationship of him is simple, and it's an excellent source for politics if it is the kind of news you are looking for. It is also one of the few voices in the list that is completely online without printing version.
