How to reference a website that has no author

When there is no author for a web page, the title moves to the first position of the reference entry: Example: All 33 Chile miners freed in flawless rescue. (2010, October 13). Retrieved from Cite in text the first few words of the reference entry: Example: All 33 Chile miners freed in flawless rescue. (2010, October 13). Retrieved from Cite in text the first few words of the reference entry: Example: All 33 Chile miners freed in flawless rescue. (2010, October 13). the full title of the web page if it is short for the parenthetical citation. Articles found on the web, like a newspaper or magazine article. Reports found on the web would be italicized in the reference list, as in Publication Manual (6th ed.) Examples 31, 32, and 33 on pp. 205-206. They would also be italicized in the in-text citation, just like a book. These posts on the APA Style is "How do I cite a website?" or "How do I cite a website?" or "How do I cite something I found on a website?" First, to cite a website in general, but not a specific document on that website, see this FAQ. Once you're at the level of citing a particular page or document, the key to writing the reference examples in Chapter 7 are sorted by the type of content (e.g., journal article, e-book, newspaper story, blog post), not by the location of that content in a library or on the Internet. The Manual shows both print- and web-based references for the different types of content. What seems to flummox our readers is what to do when the content doesn't fall into an easily defined area. Sometimes the most you can say is that you're looking at information on a page—some kind of article, but not a journal article. To explore this idea, imagine the Internet as a fried egg. The yolk contains easier to categorize content, like blog posts, lecture notes, or maps. To wit, the egg: APA Style Template for Website References Content in that egg white area may seem confusing to cite, but the template for references from this area is actually very simple, with only four pieces (author, date, title, and source): Author, A. (date). Title of document [Format description]. Retrieved from In text: (Author, year) That format description in brackets is used only when the format is something out of the ordinary, such as a blog post or lecture notes; otherwise, it's not necessary. Some other example format descriptions are listed on page 186 of the Publication Manual. It is permissible to leave hyperlinks live in reference list entries. Example of a Website Reference With All Information (also see Manual example #76): Examples of Website References With Missing Information Sometimes, however, one or more of these four pieces is missing, such as when there is a way to adapt the APA Style reference. Page 2 By Mary Lynn Skutley Today we'd like to thank you, dear readers, for your interest in APA Style. Learning style rules and keeping all the nuances straight is a challenge. But what really takes fortitude is nursing an idea, analyzing theory, conducting research, poring over data, and most of all, pounding out thoughts and connections and possibilities in a shaggy draft that is far from perfect. Thank you for taking that leap. We appreciate the patience you show in studying and working what you've written into a well-formed repast. Thanks for sharing our enthusiasm for the small fixes and tricks that can transform a manuscript. Over the past 16 months, you have challenged us to solve more than one ambiguity. You make us look closely and question more. We are most grateful for the privilege of working with you. In-text references should immediately follow the title, word, or phrase to which they are directly relevant, rather than appearing at the end of long clauses or sentences. In-text references should always precede punctuation marks. Below are examples of using in-text citation. Author's name in parentheses: One study found that the most important element in comprehending non-native speech is familiarity with the topic (Gass & Varonis, 1984). Author's name part of narrative: Gass and Varonis (1984) found that the most important element in comprehending non-native speech is familiarity with the topic. Group as author: First citation: (American Psychological Association [APA], 2015) Subsequent citation: (APA, 2015) Multiple works: (separate each work with semi-colons) Research shows that listening to a particular accent improves comprehension of accented speech in general (Gass & Varonis, 1984; Krech Thomas, 2004). Direct quote: (include page number and place quotation marks around the direct quote) One study found that "the listener's familiarity with the topic of discourse greatly facilitates the interpretation of the entire message" (p. 85). Note: For direct quotations of more than 40 words, display the quote as an indented block of text without quotation marks and include the authors' names, year, and page number in parentheses at the end of the quote as topic familiarity, may indeed have some effect. That is, prior experience with nonnative speech, such as that gained by listening to the reading, facilitates comprehension. (Gass & Varonis, 1984, p. 77) Generally speaking, if you cannot identify the author of a source, you move the title to the author position in the reference list/works cited and use a shortened version of the title for the in-text citation. If you cannot identify the publication date, you substitute n.d. for "no date." Here are examples of how it works in the three major citation styles: APA Style If a source is missing both the author. Sometimes the author is a company or other group rather than an individual. Reference page (don't forget to indent the second and subsequent lines) General Format: Title of resource. (n.d.). Source.
