(Definition of being hung up by Cambridge Advanced Learner's Dictionary Dicti courage to cut me/cut the communication with me/to cut off the line instead of "she had the courage to hang up with me? Thank you very much B and c do not seem too idiomatic for me. B may also be interpreted to mean that you cut ties with someone on a permanent basis. A could work, although the meaning is probably slightly larger than simply hanging the phone on someone. I really can't think of an exact equivalent is just like idiomatic. I'm happy with all your options except "cut the line." This is a little too strong as it suggests a more radical attack of your communication. I did not hear "cut the line" in common use. Not your suggestion is specific for a telephone conversation, which is the case of the term "to hang on someone." She "cut me" or "cut someone, rather t Han to end a conversation. I can't think of a word or a phrase that has exactly the same meaning as "reach [some]." It is a specific act associated with a specific intention. You can unconnect the call unintentionally; You can cut someone off by interrupting their speech, but the call continues; You can stop communication in various ways. But when you hang [some] you are doing something specific intention. You can unconnect the call unintentionally; You can stop communication in various ways. But when you hang [some] you are doing something specific intention. talking, because you don't want to talk more and no matter if they know. This is a great meaning packed in three small words; It is not surprising that the phrase has no exact synonym. Interesting. "To hang on someone" must return to phones like this. There is an updated equivalent: means "to put an end to a phone call abruptly (probably brutally, perhaps with rage, surely without saying goodbye. "I'd say "to hang up someone," means "to end abruptly, without saying goodbye. Interesting." Hanging on someone "must return to phones like this. The telephone system (such as typography and printing) is one of the many areas where Lexicon has been established in past days and will continue to exist regardless of technological change. You've got it. "compose" people you wish to speak even if the quadrants have disappeared (or almost) "Impulse composition" is technically a contradiction in terms, as is "tone composition." Phones that opening a connection are still "off-hook" in phone language. The phones do not ring anymore. The bells are long gone. Telephone lines are a thing of the past. Now it comes to multi-strand copper wires or optical fibers or some of these. Do not fight it. Enjoy. I need help from the British and other English speakers outside of North America. This thread seems to be the closest to what I want to ask. They are native speakers of American English with him and help me with my French. I would keep him informed if an expression is unique to the North American English and then include both the American way that the British say. I live in the United States and lives in Canada, but will use her English in most countries and therefore will have to be flexible. I translated a French phrase like "I did not want to hang you." However, I know 'how to say it in American. In the US and Canada say "hang up" to mean "disconnect the phone." The expression refers to the old style phones that were a box on the wall with a hook that would literally hang the receiver on. I think they say: "Jut down the phone" in Britain. However, would you use that expression in Britain (or in other UK countries such as Australia) to express the idea to log out of a person? For example, you would say: "I did not turn down the phone?" To me it seems strange because © appears that the person is setting the phone on the person's body. Would you say instead something like: "I did not cut you off" or maybe "I did not disconnect myself with vou?" In short, as the British would say: "I did not want riattaccarti?" I need help from the British and other English speakers outside of North America. [...] In short, as the British would say: "I did not cut you off." The difference is that hanging on someone suggests to me that you did it deliberately, and cut them out could have been an accident (first the wrong button, for example, or drop your phone on the floor.) You can even say, "I put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast" I just put the phone down on [someone] "suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast is a suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast is a suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast is a suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast is a suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast is a suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast is a suggesting again to end the call deliberately, while in contrast is a suggesting again to end the call deliberately ag (Redirected to hang up) verb 1.
