Swamikannu Vincent, one ferroviÃ; ria designer Tiruchirapalli, became a traveling exhibitor in 1905. He showed short films in a tent on the Esplanade, near the present corner of Parry, using carbide for projection. He bought the film projector and dumb films of French du Pont and set up a business as a movie exhibitor. [13] So he him with Path, a film production company pioneer well known, and projectors imported. This helped new theaters to sprout throughout presidÃancia. [14] In Ãoltimos years, he produced talkies as excavation © m built a cinema in Coimbatore. [15] To commemorate the visit of King George V event in 1909, a major Exposition £ o was organized in Madras. Its main atraçà the £ was £ exibiçà the short films accompanied by sound. The company BRITA ¢ nica imported a megaphone Crone, consisting of a film projector for a gramophone with a disc containing the prà © -gravado sound was on, and both were executed in unÃssono, producing picture and sound simultaneously. However, in £ had dialogue synchronized. Raghupathi Venkaiah Naidu, a successful fotógrafo, took the aft equipment to the Exposition £ and set up a cinema tent near the Madras High Court. [12] With this equipment, it displayed the short PÃ © rolls Fish and the coffin £ Raja in Victoria Public Hall. When this was successful, he selected the films in a tent set up on the Esplanade. These events tent were the true precursors of film espectÃ; culos. Venkiah traveled with this unit for Burma ¢ nia (now Myanmar) and Sri Lanka, and when he gathered enough money, he put up a permanent movie house in joy madrassa, in 1914, the first home cinema Madras to be ConstruÃdo by an Indian. He soon added two more, Crown Theater in Mint and Globe (later called Roxy) in Purasawalkam. Swamikannu Vincent, who had ConstruÃdo the first South cinema à India in Coimbatore, introduced the concept of "Cinema tent" in which a tent was erected in an open stretch of land near a city or town to screen the movies . The first of its kind was established in Madras, called "Edison Great Cinema projectors. [16] Most of the films shown, then calções were made in the United States and Great Britain £. In 1909, one English, T. H. Huffton founded Peninsular Madras Film Services and produced some short films for the local público. But soon, films an hour duraçà £ o, who narrated histories dramáticas, Enta £ known as "drama films" were imported. From 1912 onwards, films made in Bombay (now Mumbai) tamba © m were tested in Madras. The era of short films had ended. The arrival of drama films firmly established cinema as a form of popular entertainment. More theaters appeared in the city. Fascinated by this new form of entertainment, a automóveis dealer in Madras área a thousand lights, R. Nataraja Mudaliyar, decided to venture into the £ produçà the movies. Aft training a few days in Pune with cinematographer Stewart Smith, the official cinematographer of Lord Curzon in 1903 Durbar, he começou one preocupaçà the £ £ produçà the cinematográfica in 1916. After a few years in the Distribution £ films, he set up a company £ produçà into Madras, General Pictures Corporation, popularly known as GPC. Come As and o with the faithful wife / Dharmapathini (1929), GPC done about 24 films. GPC worked as a film school and its alumni names like Sundara Rao Nadkarni and Jiten Banerji. The GPC was studio apartments housed in bangal A' Chellapalli in Tiruvottiyur High Road in Madras. This company, which produced the majority of silent films Tamil, had ramificações in Colombo, Rangoon and Singapore. The ways of Vishnu / Vishnu Leela, that R. Prakasa made in 1932, was the úItimo silent film produced in Madras. Unfortunately, it was silent in southern India Cinema à £ o has been well documented. When talkies came, the filmmakers had to travel to Mumbai or Calcutá to make movies. Most movies this perÃodo were the initial versions of celulóide theater pieces known. The company's dramas were popular between the Public Madras. The legendary Otrivadai theater drama had been built in 1872-if in Mint. Many theater promulgated in the middle of the night. The scene scene In 1934, when Madras received his first Sound Estone. At this point, all houses in Madras were connected by sound. Narayanan, who was active during the silent era, founded Srinivaa Cineyone in which his wife worked like the Sound Recordist. Srinivasa Kalyanam (1934), directed by Narayanan, was the first sound film (Talkie) produced in Madras. The second stove of sound to appear in Madras was photos of vel, began by M. D. Rajan on Eldams Road, at Dunmore Bungalow, who belonged to the raja of Pithapuram. In a short time, more sounds have emerged. Thirty-six lengths were made in Madras in 1935. Influences the main impacts of the innence of the cinema were the cultural influences of the country. The Tamil language was the means in which many pieces and stories were written from ages so early as chaps. They were highly stylized and the nature of the spectacle was one that could attract people. Along with this, music and dance were one of the main sources of entertainment. [17] There is a strong Indian tradition of narrating mythology, history, fairy tales and so on through the music and dance. Considering that Hollywood filmmakers struggled to hide nature constructed from their work so that the realistic narrative was totally dominant, the Indian filmmakers had no attempt to hide the fact that what was shown on the screen was a creative, An illusion, a fiction. However, they demonstrated how this creation crossed with people's day-to-day lives in complex forms. [18] At the end of the Each of 1930, the State of Madras legislating approved the entertainment tax law in 1939. Estimens in 1916, a ENCONDIO, the first in South India, [Ria] was raised in Madras at 10 Millers Road, Kilpauk. He called the film company in India. Rangavadivelu, Actor of Suguna Vilasa Sabha, a theater company then, was hired to train the actors. Thirty-five days later, the first feature film made in the south of India, the extermen of Keechakavatham, based on an episode of Mahabharata, was launched produced and directed by R. Nataraja, which established India Film Company Limited (Keechaka's destruction). [19] Despite a more box office growing, Cinema Tamil remains informal and dominated by Shell companies, or wonders of a film, born and killed in terms of months. However, there are few exceptions like modern theaters, gourdings, AVM and Sri Thenandal films that survived in addition to 100 production. Exhibitor Strike 2017 in 2017, opposing the double GST tax (28%) and entertainment tax (30%), the association of Tamilnadu theater owners announced undefined closure of all Cinemas in the state of July 3, 2017. [20] [21] The strike was called and cinemas will be playing movies from Friday July 7, 2017. [22] [23] [24] [25] The government has formed a committee to decide on the existence of the 30% entertainment tax of the State. It is reported that, per day, business loss during the strike was around 20 crores.
