The aesthetics of invective: reflections on the use of verbal violence in the Suns of Independence of Ahmadou Kourouma

Mawuloe Koffi Kodah

Department of French, Central University College, Ghana

Abstract: In recent times, one major threat to peace and sustainable democratic governance in Ghana is the upwarge of the use of invective language in public discourse. Ahmadou Kourouma's novel, The suns of independence, which can be classified as a socio-political satire, provides a textual data for a critical analysis of this phenomenon in its aesthetic form. Considering literary products (poetry, drama and prose) as clear manifestations of social discourse, that is communication, this study seeks to examine the use and aesthetic significance of verbal violence in this novel initially published in French as "Les soleds des indépendances" in 1968.

In its quest, the study, in the first place, identifies and analyses three forms of invectives considered as verbal violence in use in the novel. In the second place, it examines the causes of their use and their aesthetic or stylistic significance to wicio-political discourse in the test, leading to the formulation of critical reflections on the phenomenon as a potential source of socio-political conflict and social disintegration. The study also points out how the intransigent use of vituperation resulting from egocentric pursuits eventually leads to self destruction. In this regard, The suns of independence provides both historical and contemporary textual material for reflections on the realities of the use of invectives and its aesthetic significance in socio-political discourse in fiction. Combining a range of theoretical frameworks in stylistics and pragmatics in the study of discourse, this paper examines both the methods of textual composition and the strategies of interpretation for invectives in the novel.

The significance of this study is found in the general contemporary quest for the use of sanitized language in the Ghancian socio-political discourse for sustainable democratic development and social cohesion.

Key words: aesthetics - invective - descriptive invective - attributive invective - discourse - egocentrism - pragmatics - stylistics - symbolic invective

I. INTRODUCTION

The word aesthetics is derived from the Greek term "nesthesis" which means "semation". Aesthetics, according to Hornby, A. S. (1974:15), is the "branch of philosophy which tries to make clear the laws and principles of beauty (contrasted with morality and utility)." On its part, Collins Dictionary & Thenaurus (2000:21) also defines aesthetics as "the branch of philosophy concerned with the study of such concepts as beauty, taste, etc." It further defines aesthetics as "the study of the rules and principles of art". For Plato and Aristotle, first theorists of aesthetics, the conception of Beauty is inseparable from moral and politics. Aesthetics brings together rules and principles by which Beauty is defined. What is of interest to us in these definitions is the idea of beauty. This beauty is perceived through a careful appreciation of the literality of Kourouma's diction and syntax in his novel, The Sourc of independence.

The aim of this paper is to critically analyse Kourourua's choice of words and syntactic constructions which create the forms of verbal violence in the novel, in order to bring out their aesthetic or stylistic significance. This will then lead to the formulation of critical reflections on the use of these various forms of verbal violence in the novel.

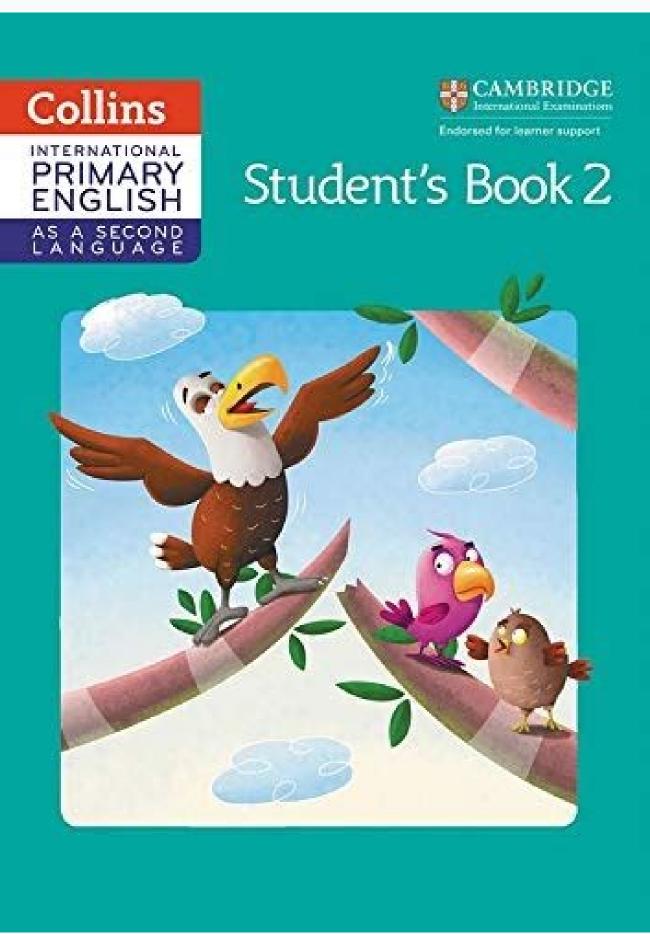

Invective refers to abusive language, violent expressions. It is a manifestation of verbal hostility which takes the form of an emotionally violent verbal denunciation or attack using strong, acerbic, abusive language. It can also be seen as an angry, critical or abusive tinde directed at someone or something. Considering the emotional and psychological effects of such language use on a person or group of persons, one cannot but classify it as a form of violence. Language use being the so use of this violence, it is therefore christened 'verbal violence'. The pesthetics of invective in this paper therefore refers to all forms of abusive language use in the production of literary and thematic effects in the novel.

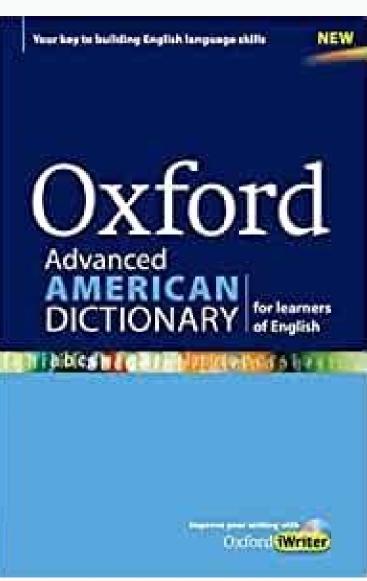

One fundamental determinant of diction and syntactic structure which creates the style of a writer is theme. Underlining this fact in African Interature, Amadou Koné (2004) writes:

Comme chez la plupart des auteurs africains, la tradition est un thème extrêmement important dans l'ouvre d'Ahmadou Kousouma. On pourmit dire que de ce point de vue, il se rapproche du somancier et ethnologue béninois Paul Hazoumé, du somancier burkinabé Nazi Boni, ou même des chantres de la Négritude des sources
