However, due to an increase in sales of goods of the first three shows and the demand from fans for a new show, Tsuburaya decided to develop the fourth Ultra series. Tsuburaya conceived the exhibition title and the idea was for the show to be a direct sequel to 1966 series, with Hayata and passing the Beta To a new human guest. The idea was presented to the Tokyo Broadcasting System (TBS) in April 1969. However, TBS and its sponsors asked that the new series are centered on a new Ultraman, separated by 1966 character, for finality of marketing and merchandising. [1] After the death of Tsuburaya, his eldest son Hajime was named president of Tsuburaya Productions and assembled a team to review Return of Ultraman. The first three shows were replicated to fan requests to temporarily curb. Shozo Uehara and TBS producer Yoji Hashimoto conceived the final concept of the series. [1] The revisions were made to the design of the new Ultraman, after feedback from licensees, in order to avoid similarities with the 1966 Ultraman. This has included giving new Ultraman gloves, boots and pinstripes around the red zones. The new character was referred to as "New Ultraman" by fans and the name was used by Tsuburaya Productions for subsequent appearances. The character has been renamed as "Ultraman Jack" in 1984, after Tsuburaya Productions held a contest for children for proposals.
